Report of Expert Lecture on
"RESEARCH METHODOLOGY"

Department of Computer Science and Engineering conducted an expert lecture on "Research Methodology" on 12th October, 2018 under TEQIP-III. The session started with an invitation to the resource person Prof. M. Narasimha Murthy, Professor, Department of Computer Science and Automation, Indian Institute of Science, Bangalore, India by Dr. P. Chenna Reddy, Director Skill Development Centre and Incubation Centre. The lecture has started with a brief introduction about the computer science branch and its history. A special note on Deep Learning which is a current emerging technology in computer science environment. The resource person suggested all the students, research scholars and faculty members, to read the current and past issues of Communications of the ACM (CACM) for knowledge up gradation and current trends in computer science world. He stated as an example, how google is concentrating and investing more money on Artificial Intelligence related technologies. Also, he specified on how UG and PG curriculum should cope up with the current technologies which in turn help students to reach greater heights in their carrier and in placements for their jobs. The resource person started discussing what is CS research?, what are the difficulties?, what is the novelty?, why a Ph.D in CS? Why not Job?, some myths while doing Ph.D, what is involved in a Ph.D? And many more. Sir discussed about the formal background of CS and different components involved around CS, and also stated, how deep learning is going to change the future of CS. Finally, he concluded with how to prepare for the computer science research in all aspects related to academics and for industry. Then some of the students asked their queries and lecture ended up with a discussion and vote of thanks by Dr. C. Shoba Bindu.
